

MASC 2107: Scuba Diving and the Marine Environment

This is a multi-disciplinary course designed to provide students with intensive training in preparation for continued marine science education. This course will include a review of the theory and practical application of diving through the use of scuba diving skills and research methodology as applied to the fields of marine biology, physical oceanography and marine archaeology.

Credits: 3

Class Hours: 3

Prerequisites:

MARN 1201: Introduction to Marine Ecology EDUC1002: Physical Development (Swimming)

Department: Marine Science